A young ladies' literary society got into a perfectly dreadful discussion at a recent meeting over the proper pronunciation of Kyrle Bellew's name. The much-admired actor's first name caused most of the trouble. One young woman brought up a particularly interesting point by declaring that when Mr. Bellew was a young man he was called "Curly," for the reason that at that time his hair was curly.

The secretary wrote, asking us to settle the dispute. We referred the question to Mr. Bellew, as the best authority, and from him have received this courteous and interesting reply:

I am more than sorry to hear that I

in any way should be the cause of contention among the charming young ladies of the ——— Literary Society, and I am particularly sorry that I must take sides against any of them. I am compelled, however, to declare that the correct pronunciation of my name is "Curl Bellyou." Years ago a few per-sons did pronounce my first name "Curly," but that name was incorrect.
"Kyrle" is a Hertfordshire name and "Bellew" is Irish, and the right pronunciation is as I have given it above. Hoping that the young ladies against whose opinion I am compelled to decide will believe me when I say that I do it with the deepest regret and with a desire to minimize my unfortunate prenomen as much as possible, I shall subscribe myself, Yours penitently.

"Do you know there is such a thing as getting so absorbed in a part that the actor frequently lives in the same atmosphere after he has put on his street clothes and left the theatre?" asked Raymond Hitchcock at the Broadway Theatre last night. "I get so interested in this half-drunken Yankee consul I am playing that I frequently 'feel the part' long after I get away from the theatre. You know I work hard for three hours at every performance and during the entire time I am supposed to be in a half-intoxicatei co dition. Now I never touch drop of any intoxicant, but just the same I am often accused of being 'tipsy' on the street. I overheard a con-

TAKEN TO MORGUE HOUR AFTER JOKE

Andrew Callahan Had Hardly Left Convivial Friends When He Fell and Was Taken Among City's Unclaimed Dead.

Andrew Callahan joked through the night with friends in Mathus's restaurant, No. 144 Eighth avenue, where he was employed; cracked his last joke when he started for home early to-day, and an hour later was in the Morgue among the unclaimed dead.

Callahan, who was forty-five years old and unmarried, lived at No. 208 West Eighth street. He is said to be well connected, but he had always maintained a strict secrecy as to the names of his relatives.

He started for his home at 5 o'clock! and had gone a short distance when a policeman saw him stagger and fall. a physician pronounced him dead when he was taken to Mercer street station.
